

As an entry-level INTP personality in UXD, I would feel most comfortable and happy in an organization where I felt part of a family. I would like a larger institution as there tends to be more funding and more stability. I want to be part of a team, but if I have tasks, I want/need to be able to complete them individually. I like being around other people, but I do prefer private solitude to social engagements. While I love making meaningful relationships, too many meetings and social interactions stifle my productivity. I need the freedom to be able to manage my own schedule. I love solving problems/puzzles.

My top picks for companies that would help me grow: Pokemon International, Activision, NSA, Apple, and Alaska Airline

Dream UX Designer Job at larger institutions:

- Pokemon International: larger company with dedicated roles; It is a company that focuses on its employees, which means they would earn my loyalty and give me a sense of pride to be a part of the organization. Those who work there have a passion for the company and their job and in being part of a family/team. I am looking for that; a larger company would mean that I would have a chance to get some good work experience in information architecture, wireframing, and testing under my belt.
- Activision: larger company, that is less employee-focused, but they are in the gaming industry and it would be fun to be a part of and gain experience in gaming-related projects.
- NSA: I first got offered employment by the NSA for a UXD role. There are a lot of contractors, but I was going to be full-time. Unfortunately my security clearance did not go through quickly and someone else filled my slot. There are a lot of exciting projects and teams to be a part of that would make a difference. The organization was more employee-focused than most larger organizations. There was a lot of focus and support on honing one's skillset.
- Apple: It is a large company who has built an empire on making its products and building out an ecosystem that is user friendly. I would be excited to work for an organization that valued input from UXDs.
- Alaska Airline: It is a large company that has a lot of growing to do with respect to setting itself apart from its competitors. Making better, smoother processes and bettering the user's experience is a way to do that. There are many opportunities and projects that have been dangled in front of me to entice me to work at that organization. This may be a good fit for work experience and making a difference in improving people's lives.
